Objection to the Class Action Settlement

Teresa Stringer, et al v. Nissan North America, Inc., Case No. 3:21-cv-00099

My name is Joan Haynes and my address is 2002 Ivy Lane, Mountain Home, Arkansas, 72653. My phone number is 870-706-7502. My husband, Rick Haynes, and I own a 2017 Nissan Rogue AWD SL which we purchased in December 2018. The VIN for this vehicle is 5N1AT2MV1HC881858, and the odometer reading today is 44,064 miles.

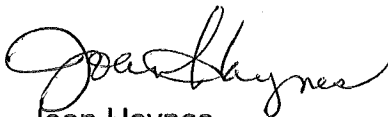

I object to the current Settlement because I believe that extending the warranty from the original 5 years or 60,000 miles to 84 months or 84,000 miles is simply neither fair nor sufficient recompense. Owners of the Nissan vehicles that have a CVT deserve to have the transmission repaired if needed and free of charge if the problem occurs within a reasonable period of time of car ownership, and therefore, the warranty should be extended to 10 years or 120,000 miles.

So, what is a "reasonable period of time" of car ownership? A reasonable period of time would cover all of the time that most people own that car. IHS Markit, Ltd. is a company which does research and provides information to industries and businesses. In a widely cited online article on their website dated June 14, 2021, IHS Markit reported its most recent findings that the average age of vehicles in use in the United States is 12.1 years. A 10 year warranty seems like a fair compromise. Additionally, a reasonable period of time would be consistent with the time period covered by the auto industry standard for an extended warranty. A simple online search reveals that 10 year or 120,000 mile extended warranties are frequently sold by a wide variety of companies. Nissan should recompense owners with peace of mind and free transmission repair by providing an extended warranty for 10 years or 120,000 miles.

This objection would apply to the entire class. I have never before submitted any objections to any class action settlements. I do not intend to appear at the Fairness Hearing, nor do I intend to be represented by separate counsel. I choose to remain in the Settlement.

I hope you will consider my objection and take my recommendation.

Sincerely,

Joan Haynes
